PREFACE.

IT is seldom that so large and comprehensive a collection of Egyptian Antiquities, very briefly noted in the following catalogue, is brought to this country by a private collector. Indeed, when viewing the numerous and varied pieces, one is inclined to regard the collection as the ample results of a long continued and arduous search by a band of archaeologists, rather than to credit the possibility of its gathering together being the work of a single individual.

About twelve years ago, when first travelling in Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt, the owner made numerous tentative excavations at various classical sites, thus commencing the collection. In the course of much subsequent travelling, the collection was very greatly enlarged, mainly by the purchase of private collections in Upper Egypt. As the antiquities were obtained they were packed and sent over to this country in cases, which were stored as they arrived, in a London depository; the collection was then removed from the depository, and unpacked for examination and classification. With the same untiring skill as that which served him in making the collection, a Private Exhibition, illustrating the History of Egypt from the pre-dynastic period down to the present time, was rapidly arranged and, after the preparation of a detailed catalogue, this was thrown open to all those known by the owner to be interested in the subject. After the closing of the exhibition, the difficulty of the further keeping of the collection became too evident, and, finally, Mr. Rustafjaell determined to dispose of it.

As an evidence of the enormous period of time covered by the various objects, a condensed chronological index is appended :—

V. MAHOMEDAN PERIOD.		„ 640—to present time

To the pre-dynastic period belong the large series of palaeolithic and neolithic flint implements and the early pottery ; to the dynastic belongs the bulk of the collection—sculpture, bronze, pottery, glazed ware, fresco-paintings, &c. The Greek, Roman and Coptic periods, are illustrated by examples of sculpture, pottery, and a fine collection of embroideries ; Mahomedan rule closes with a number of personal ornaments, and an interesting selection of trophies, recalling the most important of recent events in Egypt: the campaign in Upper Egypt and the Soudan.
